WEATHER SUMMARY

- Min RH: 16-24%.
- Winds: Terrain-driven downslope winds 3-6 mph early, then WNW 4-8 mph G10.

FIRE BEHAVIOR

GENERAL:

Fire behavior: Recovering fuel moisture supports surface fire, with some isolated torching. This is occurring at higher elevation exposed areas first. Rollout from burning snags continues to happen where they are positioned on steep slopes. However, significant spread is still not supported.

Fuels: Live fuel moistures, 1000 hr., and other dead fuels were at or near critical levels before the first rain. Currently, those indices are well below average but will recover. Fuels include timber with litter and understory, brush, and some areas of standing snags and blow down.

Topography: The fire is burning in steep, rugged terrain. The fire is burning at elevations between 1600-5500' and slopes between 40-over 100%. All aspects are represented in the fire area.

ERC value is at about the 75th percentile, below the seasonal average of approximately the 90th percentile.

SPECIFIC FIRE BEHAVIOR:

Due to all of your diligence, no significant spread is anticipated. However, with RH in the teens, you can expect more smoke production in areas holding heat in the ground and surface fuels.

DIV A/E/Y: Control lines are secure. No challenges to control lines are expected.

DIV L: Granite Creek is a wet drainage and is sheltered from general winds so no spread is anticipated.

DIV R: Suppression repair will not be impacted.

DIV T: The finger into China Creek is looking very well, there are no identified heat sources near the line.

DIV U: The areas northeast of 10N23 are looking very well. Very little smoke is visible and those that remain are identified and being worked.

AIR OPERATIONS

No limitations are anticipated.

SAFETY

Sometimes at this point on a fire like this, it is possible to lose focus. Remember how important what you are doing out there is. Keep plugging and keep your head in the game.
