JACKSON COUNTY HISTORY

Jackson County, named for General Andrew Jackson, is located in the hills of Southeastern Ohio. Some of the state's earliest settlers came to this area because of the salt licks. In 1796, Congress reserved the salt springs due to the importance of this valuable mineral.

The Scioto salt springs of Jackson County were the most important of the state's salt reservations. A thriving settlement soon grew up around the salt springs. In 1816, Congress authorized the sale of 640 acres of this salt reservation to become the seat of the newly created county. The remaining salt lands were sold in 1824.

In the mid to late 1800's a thriving iron industry was present in the county. The restored "Buckeye Furnace" in Milton Township is a fine example of the charcoal furnaces that were used in this industry. Coal mining was also extensive in the county during this period and continues to be important today.

The economy of the county is balanced between manufacturing and agriculture. Manufactured products include foods, clothing, clay products, plastics, wood products and castings.

RURAL HOUSE NUMBERING

The straight line mileage system is used in Jackson County with the house numbering generally starting at the south end of a south-to-north road and the west end of a west-to-east road.

The house numbering is based on 1000 numbers per mile. For example, a house which is exactly one mile from the beginning point of the road would have a number of 1000. One-half mile (0.5 mile) would yield a house number of 500. Two and one-eighth miles (2.125 miles) would yield a house number of 2125. House numbers assigned to the right side of a road have an even number. Those on the left side have an odd number.

All new residences must check with the County Engineer's Office for the assignment of a house number.
